Description

English 19th century Folk art portrait of Chickens, landscape with maple frame

A wonderful and well-painted piece of rare English Folk Art. The scene is of a group of Chickens in an extensive landscape pecking at their food on the ground. This style was very popular during the early Victorian period and all barnyard animals were painted by these folk art painters, with most of the painters never signing their work.

This is a very good example of what are now very rare subjects to find.

It is framed in an Antique Maple frame which might well be the original for the piece.
